STRATEGIC PLAN “TORINO METROPOLI 2025”

In July 2012, Mayor Fassino launched Torino’s third Strategic Planning effort. After a period of inoperativeness the organisation Torino Internazionale Strategica was re-born with Mayor Fassino as president, former Mayor Castellani as vice-president, and Anna Prat as Director. The first task was a broad and comprehensive outreach to key stakeholders and constituents in order to collect feedback on initial concerns and priorities and gauge enthusiasm for a new process. Following consultation with the administrations of surrounding municipalities and with distinguished youth representatives, it became clear that the main focus of any new strategic planning effort would need to be on local economic development to overcome the financial crisis. The second critical consideration was that, given the lack of public resources to stimulate economic growth, the regional nature of the financial crisis, and growing international competition for foreign markets, neither the City of Torino nor much less any of the surrounding smaller towns, could be able to compete at an international level alone. It became evident that the scope of a new plan would necessarily be metropolitan in reach, and that a planning process for economic development would need to include the coordination of physical and infrastructure investments. The Torino 2025 metropolitan planning area therefore comprises the 38 municipalities that make up the urban center and inner and outer ring cities.

The “Torino Metropoli 2025 plan” is being articulated in two main strategic directions, economic development and spatial integration, and Torino Strategica has convened a Commission for each direction, each lead by a committed and highly skilled coordinator. The Local economic development Commission is composed of public agencies, entities and private sector actors and stakeholders while the Territorial Commission is composed of Mayors and Deputy Mayors from the 38 municipalities. In inaugural meetings in July 2013 both Commissions gave initial approval to the mission of the project and the overall process in the coming year, one in which the Commissions would approve the primary focus areas of each strategic direction and give life to technical working groups that will develop strategic objectives.

In the Fall 2013, each Commission convened again to select the primary focus areas and approve the selection of coordinators for each working group. Torino Strategica is now constituting the various working groups and organizing and facilitating their work. These groups will meet several times in the next 6 months (by July 2014) to develop visions for integration and growth, set objectives and determine short and mid-term actions to fulfill those goals. Plenty of opportunities are envisioned for collaboration and coordination amongst working groups and between Commissions, also with the help of research activities and wider outreach of specific groups of experts, local organisations (so called “mobilisation activities”).

The Commissions will meet 3 more times in the next 6 months and at these meetings the coordinators from each working group will have an opportunity to present their work directly to the Commission in order to collect feedback and observations on the progress of the work. In their final meeting in July 2014, each Commission will convene to approve a comprehensive strategy that ties together the various working groups and determines an actionable agenda through 2025. Torino Strategica will work closely with technical consultants throughout this process to elaborate both strategies into one integrated vision. Three specific consultation/research and visioning activities are about to start on food economy, internationalisation strategy and a vision for the university system.

The Scientific Committee is an integral part of the steering group of the Strategic Plan. In previous plans the Scientific Committee had been mostly locally based and mostly academic, and had the critical role of providing feedback on the overall scope of the project, the planning process and the political and participatory framework within which planning took place. Today's Scientific Committee will continue to play this critical role while seeking to combine local expertise with international best practices through an integrated team of local and international experts. The team will meet for the first time in January to review the entire scope of the project, participation, work flow and the political context. In subsequent meetings and through sustained engagement, the Committee will provide periodic feedback and input into the work process, outputs and development of the plan.
